

Flat Stanley Project 2019: Due Date: May 22nd

We will be starting a fun project using each student's personally created "Flat Stanleys". This type of project has stemmed from the Flat Stanley stories. Each student will be taking his or her Stanley on outings and taking pictures of him (or her) around Seattle and beyond!

For instance, if you are taking a trip down to Alki Beach, bring Stanley and take a picture of him building a sand castle or ordering fish and chips...

Stanley is small and portable, so he can go anywhere. Maybe he will go to work with his owner's parents, to a movie, sporting event, shopping day, coffee shop...you name it.

Stanley will need to keep a journal of his outings. This journal will come home the week of March 25th. The journal will be written from the flat person's point of view. He/she will describe what is happening in the outing. Try to include any facts about the place that is being visited---like: "The Denny party landed right here at Alki Beach in November of 1851" Each entry should have one or more pictures to accompany the journal entry.

The goal is to have at least 5 quality entries with pictures. Students are welcome to do more however. There are 10 pages in the book. We will complete one entry at school prior to sending the journal home, and one when they return to school to wrap up the journal. The two entries at school do not count as part of the 5 required. That works out to less than one entry a week, unless you do a few extra.

Journal entries must be neatly and thoughtfully completed. A well-written paragraph that includes a topic sentence, at least three-five descriptive sentences and a conclusion is expected. This will be modeled at school and a sample will be included with the journals the students bring home.

Figurative language: The students have been learning about figurative language at school, which includes, similes, metaphors, hyperbole, idioms and personification. Students are required to include at least one example of figurative language in each entry.

One or more of the journal entries must be written in cursive.

The actual journal entries should be final copy neat. Students should make rough drafts and get some editing help before they write them in the journal. Quality work, detail, accurate spelling and punctuation is expected on all entries.

This should be a fun and creative project. I recommend keeping Stanley in the car with a note pad to take notes of his adventures. The actual journal writing should be done afterwards.

Some students may decide they need a couple of Stanleys to make sure they always have one in the car or one available to send with a friend on a special trip. If you would like to make a color copy of the Stanley I would be happy to laminate it for you at school. If you need any help printing out pictures for the journals please let me know. I can print pictures at school as long as it is not at the last minute. (i.e. the day the journal is due 😊)

You might like to visit the Flat Stanley Project site to see where other students around the country have taken their Stanleys!

Videos of Flat Stanley are also encouraged. This is a fun way to add some creativity to the project. Check out this video of Flat Stanley in Seattle!

Let me know if you have any questions.

Have fun with this project!

On the next page you will find a sample entry to show the format of writing the journals should contain.

(Topic Sentence) Today I reached new heights, I visited the amazing Space Needle in Seattle, Washington.

(Descriptive sentences-at least 3 are required, but I included more) First, we boarded the elevator and received a quick, but educational overview by our guide. The tour guide was as factual as an atlas. (Simile) Did you know the Space Needle was built in 1962 and is 605 ft. tall?

(Fact) Next, we wandered around the visitor center. It was great because you could learn all about Seattle, and use the cool technology they have added. Finally, we went out on the observation deck. What a view! The wind was howling. (Personification) (Concluding Sentence) I can't wait to go back to the Space Needle again. Next time I might eat dinner in the revolving restaurant.

Minimum for journal entries is 5 quality sentences.

- Topic sentence
- Three-five descriptive sentences of the event or place visited.
- Conclusion/wrap up sentence. Not just, "Bye, see you next time" It should wrap up the specific event you just described.
- Watch word choice make sure words like "then" or "nice" are not used too often. Use interesting, descriptive adjectives and adverbs throughout the journal entries.
